Way of Discipleship Small Groups How do we apply the Bible well to things we wrestle with today?

Touching base (5 minutes)

Open in prayer as is helpful for your group.

If this is your first session take time to introduce yourselves and set any ground rules you want to for your time together.

If you met previously take the opportunity either as a group or in pairs to check in with each other about how your response from last time has gone.

Opening question(s) (5 minutes)

What kind of 21st century questions do we need to apply the Bible to, but aren't specifically mentioned in its writings?

Understanding the information (25 minutes)

In the New Testament we see Christians working through issues and controversies together. While Christ is the fullest revelation of God we have, we are still learning. Paul writes that until the world and human beings are completely restored, we continue to "see through a glass darkly" (1 Corinthians 13:12). We continue to live in a time of progressive revelation.

As such then, and now, there are questions about which Christians disagree on, and new situations where we wrestle with how to apply God's revealed truth well. Christians have been unable to agree on some theological matters, and hold different understandings of some ethical questions – for example in our day the nature of human identity and relationships.

When we approach difficult questions, four chief lenses (or "sources of God's revelation") have been developed through which we can seek to get as close as we can to a faithful Christian response.

Three (Scripture, Reason, Tradition) were developed by Richard Hooker (1554–1600), a prominent Anglican priest, and a fourth (Experience) was added by John Wesley (1703-1791), who was responding to his sense of God's Spirit at work in his life and speaking to him.

These four sources of guidance work together, often overlapping to act as legs of a table, helping us discern in a balanced way.

1 Scripture: What does the Bible say? For Christians the Bible is always the supreme source of authority, and the testing measure for everything else. Anglicans emphasise that 'Holy Scripture containeth all things necessary to salvation' (Article 6 of the 39 articles). When talking with others about Scripture, part of our journey is to be sensitive to the way people might interpret Scripture in different ways from us.

One key principle in interpreting well is reflecting on whether issues are seen as first order (in other words, essential) or second order in Scripture. In 1 Corinthians 15 Paul begins the chapter by reminding them "For what I received I passed on to you as of first importance: that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures..."

In 434 AD Vincent of Lerins was asked a question: What should every Christian believe for sure? He replied: quod ubique, quod semper, quod ab omnibus creditum est. That which has been believed everywhere, always and by all people. For centuries this has acted as a guide for first order parts of the Bible.

Questions to ask: Am I giving the Bible the full weight it needs? Am I aware of my own interpretations? What are first order and second order issues?

2 Reason: What makes sense? Hooker believed God had gifted us with the ability to think and feel, and with conscience. Reason helps us to connect and analyse various ideas, concepts, and arguments. It can help us define and defend how we view Scripture, but also our traditions and even our experiences.

Reason is not the opposite of faith – reason can be exercised with faith, and faith can be defended by reason. As Christians we are transformed by the "renewing of our minds." (Romans 12:2).

While faith might always go beyond reason, it never goes against it, and sound arguments can be made to explore and defend positions. Nevertheless, we will always be aware that no one person can be completely objective.

Questions to ask: Do I see my ability to think as a gift as I interpret the Bible and listen to others? Am I humble about my own brokenness as I consider this question?

3 Tradition: What have voices before us said? Each generation of Christians does not come from nowhere, but we have inherited wisdom from those who have gone before as they have sought to apply the Bible. They have developed principles of interpreting Scripture well and living it out. God has been active in the lives of those who have passed on their living tradition to us.

These voices have an important, but secondary role. The Church of England has historically drawn on the thinking of the early church "fathers and mothers" yet always sees these teachings as being useful only as much as they are "agreeable to the...scriptures" (Canon A5).

Questions to ask: What voices and wisdom do I need to pay attention to?

4 Experience: How have I and others sensed God's direct action? God is always at work in all His creation, and in our daily lives, and therefore we expect Him to be revealing Himself in new ways.

Wesley believed it was only when we experienced something personally that we could have true confidence in our understanding.

We can be suspicious of experience because it is subjective. At best it can only reinforce our opinion, rather than inform it. Yet experiences have always really happened, whether physical or psychological. The question is how much is our interpretation of the experience subjective?

In addition, in making decisions, the experience of others can enable us to pay attention to perspectives we would be otherwise unable to understand or consider, particularly those who have been marginalised.

In making good decisions, a final principle is that it is in the context of a Spirit-led community – in which we are open to the Holy Spirit, learn from each other, and read Scripture together, that the peace of God to guide us will most likely be found.

Questions to ask: Am I open to God speaking to me today in this question? How am I listening to the experiences of those who can help me understand better? Where is God at work in the world?

Discuss: Which of these four lenses do you find easiest/hardest? Why?

Reading the Bible (15 minutes)

Read 1 Corinthians 8 in which Paul applies God's truth to a particular issue.

Discuss the Discovery Bible Study questions: What does this passage teach me about God? What does this passage teach me about people? How does this passage call me to obey God? What might I do in response to this this week?

Seeing how it looks in real lives (10 minutes)

There is no video, but you are invited to discuss your experience of you have tried to think as a Christian using Scripture, Reason, Tradition, Experience.

Responding to God's leading (5 minutes)

Give people an opportunity to think about, "What might God be showing me and how might I respond?" They may like to write this down and/or share it with the group and/or share it with one other person. A friendly question is to ask each other, "Is there anything that would be helpful to ask you next time?"

Group prayer (5 minutes)

O eternal God, who alone can order the unruly wills and affections of sinful people; Grant your people grace to love what you command and to desire what you promise, so that, among the many changes of this world, our hearts may surely be fixed where true joys are to be found; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Richard Hooker.

HOW DO WE APPLY THE BIBLE WELL TO THE QUESTIONS WE WRESTLE WITH TODAY?

The New Testament Christians had to work through disagreements about big issues. Because we are waiting to be completely restored, we continue to "see through a glass darkly" (1 Corinthians 13:12). We continue to live in a time of progressive revelation.

Today there are still questions about how to live faithfully which Christians disagree on, and new situations where we wrestle with how to apply God's revealed truth well.

Four things can work together to help us make good responses.

Three (Scripture, Reason, Tradition) were developed by Richard Hooker (1554–1600), a prominent Anglican priest, and a fourth (Experience) was added by John Wesley (1703-1791).

These four "Sources of God's revelation" work together as guidance, often overlapping to act as legs of a table, helping us discern in a balanced way.

1. Scripture: What does the Bible say?

For Christians the Bible is always the supreme source of authority, and the testing measure for everything else.

Reading it well involves:

Getting as close to the original meaning as possible

Being aware of our own interpretation, and those of others.

Reflecting on whether issues are seen as first order (in other words, essential) or second order in Scripture: "For what I received I passed on to you as of first importance: that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures..." (1 Corinthians 15)

In 434 AD Vincent of Lerins said first order things were:

That which has been believed everywhere, always and by all people.

For centuries this has acted as a guide for first order parts of the Bible.

Questions to ask:

Am I giving the Bible the full weight it needs?

Am I aware of my own interpretations?

What are first order and second order issues?

2. Reason: What makes sense?

We are God's partners in creation gifted with the ability to think and feel, and with conscience. Reason helps us to connect and analyse various ideas, concepts, and arguments. It can help us define and defend how we view Scripture, but also our traditions and even our experiences.

Reason is not the opposite of faith – reason can be exercised with faith, and faith can be defended by reason. As Christians we are transformed by the "renewing of our minds." (Romans 12:2).

While faith might always go beyond reason, it never goes against it, and sound arguments can be made to explore and defend positions. Nevertheless, we will always be aware that no one person can be completely objective.

Questions to ask:

Do I see my ability to think as a gift as I interpret the Bible and listen to others? Am I humble about my own brokenness as I consider this question?

4. Experience: How have I and others sensed God's direct action?

God is always at work in all His creation, and in our daily lives, and therefore we expect Him to be revealing Himself in new ways. Wesley believed it was only when we experienced something personally that we could have true confidence in our understanding. We can be suspicious of experience because it is subjective. We think at best it can only reinforce our opinion, rather than inform it.
